 COMPARISON SHOPPING FOR ANSWERS ***

by Fred Hoffman <wfh@langline.com>

Back in the days when I used to speak at genealogical conferences, I particularly enjoyed meeting and talking with the other folks who were giving presentations. They invariably knew a great deal more about actual research than I did, because my work deals more with translation and editing. There was always plenty to learn from talking with these experts.

In our conversations, I noticed there was one irritant that came up time and again: the researcher who makes the rounds of the speakers, to do “comparison shopping,” for want of a better term. There was always at least one person, sometimes more, who’d stop me and ask me a bunch of questions on his or her particular brick wall; I’d answer to the best of my ability. Later, I’d notice the same person asking another speaker the same questions. Later, yet another. After a while, it got to where we speakers would ask each other, “Has so-and-so caught you yet?” Then we’d compare notes on how we answered the questions, often finding we had given similar answers.

When it became really funny, and a little irritating, is when I’d attend the same event the next year, and there was the comparison shopper again, asking the same questions, getting the same answers, still shopping!

Please understand, if you are a “comparison shopper,” I’m not griping at you. It’s perfectly reasonable to take advantage of the presence of numerous experts to get their best insights. You pay your money to attend an event, you have every right to get the most you can out of it ... But after a while, we speakers couldn’t help but get the impression these persons shopping for answers didn’t even seem to be paying attention to what we said.

In recent years, as I’ve given talks less often but have answered more and more questions online, I found the comparison shoppers there, too (including a few I’d met in person). It’s gotten to the point where I’m sometimes reluctant to even answer a question until I’ve done a search to see who else these people have asked. There’s no point in my spending hours looking for info, then finding out someone else had already provided the exact same info back in 2008, only to be ignored!

If you’re a comparison shopper, I’m not asking you to stop it. Who am I to tell you what you can and can’t do?! But in the interest of helping you actually get answers, rather than spend all your life asking the same old questions, perhaps I can offer a little advice:

Be as concise as possible, but don’t leave out facts!

What I mean is, getting the right answer often depends on asking exactly the right question; and formulating a question well is not easy. If you’ve asked a lot of folks and no one’s been able to help you, maybe you’re not asking the right question—or you’re not asking the question right.

So work on it. Leave out anything that isn’t relevant; include anything that might be. In fact, next time, mention that you’ve asked others, and no one could answer you; and include leads that have turned out to be wrong. With really tough questions, eliminating the “usual suspects,” so to speak, can be vital. Knowing several people have studied this problem, and what they suggested, can be useful. But for God sake, include any hard facts you have: religion, time frame, names of people, and especially names of places. Many a tough question has melted away once we knew the right place to look.

I saw an illustration of this last week. A gentleman posted a note on a mailing list devoted to Lithuanian genealogy, saying he was looking for a place named Raczki that was somewhere near Wilno (now Vilnius, Lithuania). I’d seen this man post notes before, and he’s clearly a good guy; so I wondered if I could help. I was not the only one; several of us responded with our best insights. I know I spent maybe an hour or more looking through the Słownik geograficzny and Bystrzycki’s gazetteer of Poland after World War I, trying to come up with a Raczki that was close enough to Wilno to be a good candidate. I posted my best answer, but made no pretense of certainty that it was correct.

A couple of days later, I noticed the same question on a Polish genealogy mailing list. Again, some bright folks responded, trying to help. Finally, the man asking about Raczki promised to send the complete file of what he had to one of the people trying to help him. The next day, the latter posted a note online in which he was clearly trying not to scream: that file included the name of the powiat this Raczki was in! That was the key piece of info, the one that made it possible to find the right answer. If we had known that from the beginning, we could have found this Raczki in no time. (It turned out the village’s standard name was Radźki, of which Raczki is a variant. In the last century, it’s been ruled by the Russian Empire, the Second Polish Republic, Nazi Germany, the Soviet Union, and now Belarus. You can understand why it presented challenges.)

No one was trying to be a jerk here, and there’s no reason to criticize anyone. But it is a simple fact that mentioning the name of the powiat up front would have saved everyone a lot of time and trouble. And yet, how was this gentleman to know that? This is why you ask experts; a bit of info that means nothing to you might mean everything to a specialist.

The best approach is to edit your questions, again and again, trying to hone them to a fine edge. Cut out the stuff about Uncle Walt’s lumbago and what a stubborn old hag Auntie May was. That’s just clutter; it gets in the way. But if you have a name, especially of a place, include it! If you get an answer from one expert, and it leads nowhere, mention that fact the next time you ask, briefly—that way, the next expert knows not to waste time on a dead end. Each step of the way, make your question better and more exact.

Sooner or later, you’ll find someone who can answer it.

 LETTER FROM THE EDITOR ***

I want to thank everyone who took the time to write me and let me know they’d received the May issue of Gen Dobry! We’d had trouble with the previous issue; a great many of our subscribers did not get their copies. It appears we have now fixed the problem, and your notes were a big help. Thanks to all of you—and don’t forget, if you don’t get your copy, you should write me and let me know. Also, you can always download the PDF version of each month’s issue on the PolishRoots site, at <http://polishroots.org/GenDobry/tabid/60/Default.aspx>.

Oh, yes, I apologize for giving my e-mail address wrong. Many of you tried to write me care of the address as I gave it, with the domain langline.org, and had no luck. The right address, of course, is <wfh@langline.com>. I’m still trying to figure out how on earth I got that wrong!

 THE LATEST FROM POLISHORIGINS

by Agnieszka Pawlus, PolishOrigins

Editor—I know many of you receive the monthly e-mail newsletters from PolishOrigins, but I like to repeat them for the benefit of those who aren’t subscribed. The newsletters almost always have interesting information and offers that may benefit you.

On 8 March 2008, the Polish Archives of Audio-Visual Records, founded in 1955, was transformed into the National Digital Archives (NDA). Since then, their main goals are:

- to archive digital materials, including digital documents,
- to archive photographs, films and sound recordings,
- to create digital files of hard copy materials,
- to share information about archives,
- to make the collection accessible online.

A part of the National Digital Archives is the project Szukaj w archiwach (“Search the archives”), where the digitized documents are accessible for everyone, for free. Such an opportunity for us genealogists!

What is more: the Polish Archives’ online database is constantly growing. Here are some news from Polish Archives: Polish State Archives have now more than 11 589 600 scans available online! On June 5 Polish Archives added another 1.3 million scans.

How to check if the desired parish records are available online?

Here is short instruction based on post of our PO Forum member ‘rakow’. Thank you Paul!

2. You might see the white pop-up with the title “Bazy danych w archiwach państwowych” or “Databases in state archives.” Just close it, by clicking on the grey X in the top right corner.

Gen Dobry!, Vol. XV, No. 6, June 2014 — 4
3. Click the Union Jack at the top right corner of the page (or the German or Polish flag if you prefer).

4. Tick the box “only with scans / tylko ze skanami.” Below the search box, select the tab “Everything / Wszystko” (instead of the tab “Vital records and civil registers / Akta metrykalne i stanu cywilnego”, which most instructions for this site steer you to).

5. Type the place name you are interested in into the search box.

6. Click “Search / Szukaj.”

7. See what comes up. There are lots of places that still have nothing on line, but, you might get lucky, especially if you have several places to try.

8. Scans are original and descriptions of search results are only in Polish:

   Księga urodzeń = Birth register

   Księga małżeństw = Marriage register

   Księga zgonów = Death register

   Akta stanu cywilnego = Civil registers (all BMD records in one book)

If you have questions about this or need some help, post your inquiry on our Forum in thread: ‘Polish State Archives on-line database: szukajwarchiwach.p’

Recently, we enriched our Tours offer for ready-made, private tours in southern Poland. We would like to proudly present:

3 days tour: “Wooden treasures of Southern Poland”

See the itinerary: <http://polishorigins.com/document/wooden_treasures>

Wooden architecture is something that we believe is unique in this part of Europe. It has always made a big impression on the people who visit this southern section of Poland. During this three-day trip from Kraków, you will visit wooden churches on the UNESCO heritage list. They include unique wooden architecture styles from the Podhale region and The Ethnographic Park in Sanok (Skansen).

The beautiful shapes, perfectly balanced proportions of the buildings, and the intricate woodcarvings are admired by visitors. And there is something more... the very special aroma of the old wood, and the nice coolness you encounter when you enter the building on a hot day. The tour takes place in the two provinces of southern Poland: Małopolska (Lesser Poland) and Podkarpackie (Subcarpathia) Province.

6 days “Mini Galicia Tour”

See the itinerary: <http://polishorigins.com/document/mini_gt>

This tour is designed for, but not limited to, people whose forefathers for generations had lived in Galicia (southern part of today’s Poland). We want provide you the best possible opportunity to experience the world you ancestors had to leave.

Our goal is to enrich your understanding of your forefathers’ life. If you liked the idea of our regular PO Galicia Tour but you have limited time: Mini Galicia Tour will be perfect for you!

As you can see on PolishOrigins Blog, a lot is happening in 2014. Currently we are publishing Carol’s blog: Wanderlust: Polska 2014:

“And so it begins, our trip to Poland. Chilly here in Cleveland, but the sun is shining ... After doing research on my Polish roots for 25+ years, I am finally going to visit the ancestral homeland...”

As we already mentioned in our May Newsletter, PO Galicia Tours, in September 7-17 and October 5-15, are confirmed! There are still openings available for both September and October dates. Find more information on the PO Galicia Tour website.

<http://polishorigins.com/document/galicia_tour>

If you want, please help to spread the news! We would appreciate if you forward our mail to anyone you think might be interested in the topic.

Greetings from Poland!

PGSA QUARTERLY MEETING

“THE 1944 WARSAW UPRISING: ITS LEGACY FOR POLAND”
Polish Museum of America, 984 N. Milwaukee Ave., Chicago, Illinois

This year marks the seventieth anniversary of the 1944 Warsaw Uprising, one of the most heroic and tragic events in modern history. The goal of this short presentation is twofold: to present the Warsaw Uprising in a historical context, and to assess its broad legacy for Poland and the world. Marek Suszko is a Polish-American historian. He teaches Polish and European history at Loyola University Chicago. His research focuses on Polish history, including the history of socialism and modern Poland, and he is currently working on his book on Polish history from 1945 to 1956.

There is plenty of parking and it’s free! Public transportation is available. Take the CTA 56 Milwaukee Avenue bus to Augusta or take the Blue Line to Chicago Avenue or Division Street.

 MORE USEFUL WEB ADDRESSES ***

This link takes you to an interesting blog entry, “An American on Broad Street: How Do You Find Family in Poland?” It was written by Dorena Wasik and tells about her recent trip to Poland. She and Jonathan Shea organized the “Road Home,” a trip earlier this year to places of ancestral origin, organized under the auspices of the Polish Genealogical Society of Connecticut and the Northeast. I was pleased to see praise for Jonathan and also for Aleksandra Kacprzak, a Polish researcher familiar to readers of PGSCTNE’s journal, Pathways & Passages. I know everyone involved worked hard to make the trip a success, and it’s always gratifying to see hard work rewarded!

<http://cpx.republika.pl/czeladz.htm>

This Polish-language page has some very interesting information on 16th-century peasants working on manorial farmsteads. It includes a table with average daily food consumption for such peasants within the Kingdom of Poland. While Google Translate has problems with much of the content, it can make the table comprehensible; it is fascinating info.

<http://www.austriahungary.info/en/gazetteer1900>

This gazetteer for the Austria-Hungary in the early 1900s links to really useful information on all kinds of places not so easy to learn about. I found it while looking for details on the German names of villages in the Unterkrain region of what is now Slovenia. It was a huge help in translating a German-language legal contract, and I resolved to bookmark it and not lose track of it!

On June 5, Eastman’s Online Genealogy Newsletter [EOGN] had an article on Ancestry.com’s closing down operations of MyFamily, MyCanvas, Mundia and the Y-DNA and mtDNA tests. I’m not sure how many of our readers will be affected by this, but I felt we should include a link to the EOGN article, so that you can learn more if this will affect you. Also, this link <http://goo.gl/CkGt6F> takes you to an article in which Ken Chahine of Ancestry.com explains some of the reasons behind the decision to terminate the Y-DNA and mtDNA products.

A similar article in EOGN mentioned that “Family Tree DNA sent an email message to all Group Administrators to remind them what Family Tree DNA offers.” Eastman felt non-administrators would also want to move their own data. The above site gives information and pricing.

Eastman also had a short article on the new season of Who Do You Think You Are, which premieres July 23 on TLC.

This article from EOGN talks about a cleaner, D/2 Biological Solution, that is apparently safe to use when cleaning gravestones. Over the years, I’ve noticed the topic of cleaning gravestones without damaging them arises often in genealogical circles, and finding a good solution is not exactly easy. It sounds as if this product gets the job done.

This has nothing to do with genealogy per se, but this page lets you view Drzeworyt ludowy w Polsce, by Władysław Skoczylas. It’s a collection of Polish folk woodcuts. I’m not generally all that fond of folk art, but I found these very interesting.

Additions to the Genealogy Indexer site this month include 1929 Pomerania Landowners {d1080}, 1926 Warsaw Calendar {d1079}, 1897 Warsaw Calendar {d1076}, 1872 West Prussia
Landowners {d1083}, 1929/1930 Jasło Gymnasium Report {s282}, and 1871 East Prussia Landowners {d1087}. You need the DjVu plugin for your web browser to view the items; and they have all been OCR’ed (processed with optical character recognition) software so that the text is searchable—but OCR is never 100% reliable, so read the suggestions on how to improve your search results.

<http://yourjewishgem.blogspot.com/>

Anyone with Jewish ancestry might want to take a look at this site, on which Marilyn Robinson has assembled a lot of specific information broken down by subject. The site presents a lot of names excerpted from various reports and sources, and I feel this site is worth keeping an eye on, especially for Jewish researchers.

<http://global.truelithuania.com/category/usa/>

Elise Crocker mentioned this site on the LithGen mailing list. It contains a lot of information about Lithuanian immigration to the United States, including communities, churches, and landmarks of importance to Lithuanian Americans. The home page offers links to “Lithuanians and Their Heritage Abroad,” all over the world.

<http://www.genealogiapolska.pl/>

Valerie Warunek mentioned this page on the Facebook page for the Polish Genealogical Society of Michigan. I don’t recall ever seeing it or talking about it before, and it looks to me as if it deserves more attention. Don’t worry if the home page comes up in Polish; clicking on the U. S. flag in the upper left corner changes the interface language to English.

<http://www.geonames.org>

This is another site Valerie mentioned on PGSM’s Facebook page that I don’t recall visiting before. The site claims “The GeoNames geographical database covers all countries and contains over eight million place names that are available for download free of charge.” I haven’t used it enough yet to form an opinion, but it is probably worth a closer look.

<http://tinyurl.com/p4lc4wg>

Valerie also mentioned the page this link takes you to: Greek Catholic duplicate records from western Ukraine. The original URL is quite lengthy, so I took the liberty of generating this TinyURL to take you to the page, which I believe is likely to benefit many researchers with links in that region of the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth.

<http://www.genealogyblog.com/?p=32012>

Researchers with roots in former East Prussia might be interested in this Genealogy Blog entry, mentioned in the June 1st issue of The Genealogy News—Weekly Edition. The entry announced that Volume 47 of the series Map Guide to German Parish Registers is now shipping. This volume is by Kevan M. Hansen and covers the Kingdom of Prussia, Province of East Prussia, Regierungsbezirk Königsberg. The information covers what is now Kaliningrad Oblast of Russia and the Warmia region of northeastern Poland.

Gesher Galicia continues to add cadastral maps to their online collection. Earlier this month, Pamela Weisberger announced to the Jewish Gen newsgroup that an 1849 map of Dębica, a sizable town in southeastern Poland, is now available at the above link. It just amazes me that these days, we can actually see these maps and study them closely online! While I’m mentioning this, I should admit I was flattered that Pamela’s note included a link to my translation of the Słownik geograficzny entry for Dębica, <http://kehilalinks.jewishgen.org/kolbuszowa/debica/debica10.html>.

Debbie Greenlee posted a note to several mailing lists about a WNYC radio interview about genealogy. Go to this site and click on the “play” button.

Responding to a question from Polish genealogy blogger Al Wierzba, C. Michael Eliasz-Solomon wrote this entry on how to use Szukajwarchiwum.pl. I know many folks find that site a little challenging, and will appreciate any help they can get!

On the Polish Genealogy page on Facebook, Ceil Jensen posted this link to a project by historian Norman Davies to reconstruct the trail taken by Anders Army. It invites you to “help us to reconstruct history by telling your story.”
